

Grandma and the Great Gourd: A Timeless Bengali Folktale for All Ages

Once upon a time, in a faraway village, there lived a kind and resourceful old woman named Grandma. Grandma was known for her cleverness and her love for her community. One day, a greedy king came to the village and demanded that the villagers give him all of their food. The villagers were terrified, but Grandma had a plan.

Grandma went to her garden and picked the largest gourd she could find. She then hollowed out the gourd and filled it with delicious food. Grandma took the gourd to the king and said, "Your Majesty, I have a gift for you." The king was delighted and quickly ate all of the food in the gourd.

When the king was finished, Grandma said, "Your Majesty, I have one more gift for you." Grandma then reached into the gourd and pulled out a tiny seed. "This is a magic seed," she said. "If you plant it, it will grow into a giant gourd that will feed your entire kingdom." The king was overjoyed and thanked Grandma profusely.

The king planted the seed, and it soon grew into a giant gourd. The gourd was so large that it could feed the entire kingdom for months. The king was so grateful to Grandma that he gave her all the riches he had. Grandma used her riches to help the villagers, and they all lived happily ever after.
