Signs of Pregnancy

The first sign of pregnancy in cats is usually a change in appetite. Pregnant cats often eat more frequently and may have a voracious appetite. Other signs of pregnancy include:

- Weight gain
- Enlarged abdomen
- Swollen mammary glands
- Nesting behavior
- Changes in behavior, such as becoming more affectionate or withdrawn

Caring for Your Pregnant Cat

Once you know your cat is pregnant, it's important to take good care of her. Here are some tips:

- Provide her with a quiet and comfortable place to rest.
- Feed her a high-quality diet that is rich in protein and calories.
- Make sure she has plenty of fresh water available.
- Avoid giving her any medications or supplements without first consulting with your veterinarian.
- Take her to the veterinarian for regular checkups.

Preparing for Labor and Delivery

As your cat's due date approaches, it's important to start preparing for labor and delivery. Here are some things you can do:

- Set up a nesting box for her in a quiet and private place.
- Gather supplies, such as towels, blankets, and a heating pad.
- Make sure you have a veterinarian on call in case of any emergencies.

Raising Kittens

Once your cat has given birth to her kittens, it's important to provide them with proper care. Here are some tips:

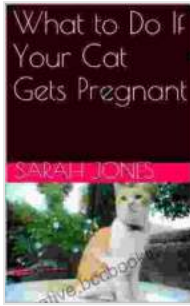

- Keep the kittens warm and dry.
- Feed them a high-quality kitten formula.
- Stimulate them to go to the bathroom by gently rubbing their genital area with a warm, damp cloth.
- Weigh them regularly to make sure they are gaining weight.
- Take them to the veterinarian for regular checkups.

Caring for a pregnant cat and raising her kittens can be a rewarding experience. By following the tips in this guide, you can help your cat have a healthy pregnancy and delivery, and you can give her kittens the best possible start in life.
